Oh, the look of ineffable relief which came into the face of the dving man! He did not ask if his daughter were willing, but, bracing himself to a final effort, took her hand and laid it in that of his friend. "God bless you both," he murmured, and then, with a smile on his lips, went out into the Great Hereafter.

After this it was more than ever Mr. Hopkins who did everything. Alice "elt herself bound hand and foot; al- fancied so, but as she sang it disay though the bonds were of softest silk, hey were strong as steel.

Dick, for whom she had promised to wait a lifetime, if need be, and who had sailed away on a three-years' cruise the day before Mr. Hopkins' telegram came.

There was a naval station near the ng, and the officers of the man-o'-war in port were coming and going continually. As one of the prettiest girls at she had already left her mother to the Cape, Alice had been one of the belles of the season. She and Richard Harvie had fallen in love with each other, after the inconsequent manner of young things who take no thought of the future. They had settled it that they were to be married when Dick got his "step;" meanwhile he was to perform prodigies of valor, and it would be happiness to be engaged. There were moments when Alice felt impelled to tell Mr. Hopkins the story and throw herself upon his magnanim ity, which she felt sure would not fail. refrained for the sake of her mother. Crushed and broken-hearted, Mrs. Frazier had but one joy left, the satisfaction which she took in her daughter's engagement to Mr. Hopkins. When it came to the point, Alice felt that she must suffer anything rather than deprive her of that.

She wrote to Dick and waited fevershly for an answer, her letter being scarcely more than an incoherent appeal for advice. Weeks passed, bringing no reply, and Alice bethought herself bitterly that it had been generally understood at the Cape that Miss Frazier was the only child of well-todo parents.

Mr. Hopkins adored his young wife and rejoiced to gratify her every whim. Moreover, Alice had always been fond of him, and to her surprise she found herself by no means unhappy. It would be too much to say that she crased to remember Dick but that young man was thousands of miles away, and the thinking did no harm, even though, during the Spanish war, she searched the newspapers for news of him, and felt a little thrill of pride and pleasure when she saw that Ensign Richard Scott Harvie had been promoted to a lieutenantcy for distinguished gallantry in action. She could not guess that Dick, pierced to the core by what he considered her mercenary course, had made up his mind to let her see that the loss had been Good Year for Secret Service. The annual report of Chief Wilkie of the secret service division, treasury department, submitted to Secretary Gage, indicated that this has been the most successful year in the history of the divsion. During the 12 months ending June 30, 1901, there were placed in circulation but four new ounterfeit notes, against an average of about 10 for each year during the preceding 10 years. Only one of these ew notes was at all dangerous, the others being the product of unskilled workmanship. The total amount of counterfeit currency which came into the possession of the division during the year amounted to $30,056, while $18,117 in counterfeit coin was con fiscated. Coin counterfeiting decreased all over the country except in New York city and vicinity, where there has been a gradual increase in this class of crime, particularly cases in which genuine silver forms the basis of the imitations. The arrests for 15 months show a total of 594.
